eUniversity Forum: eIntegration Challenges for Rectors and Deans
Sunday, June 5, 2005

We welcome your involvement and cooperation in discussing opportunities enabled by eCommerce and related technologies in universities and the global communities they serve. Based on Forums during the past four years at the Bled eConferences, it is our assertion that eCommerce is beginning to permeate the University infrastructure. The application of eCommerce in the application of learning and fostering regional development can also have a major impact on achieving significant societal objectives.

Please respond to John.Burbridge@elon.edu or Tapio.Reponen@tukk.fi if you can contribute to the theme of this forum.

Specific objectives of the forum are as follows:

- The creation and integration of instructional management systems to facilitate the delivery of learning
- The introduction, implementation, and integration of enterprise-wide systems encompassing all academic and administrative functions
- The integration of instructional systems with enterprise-wide systems
- The further development of eCommerce systems for university suppliers of materials, supplies, and services and other regional initiatives of the University
- The integration of eCommerce and eLearning applications to facilitate economic and community development
- The formation of alliances to support all of the above
- All other pertinent issues.

Please consider participating and joining us at this Forum in Bled on June 5, 2005.

The last Bled eCommerce Conference ("eGlobal" - 17th Bled eCommerce Conference, June 21-23, 2004) attracted 300 participants from 34 countries. Papers presented as well as panels and meetings conducted demonstrated that eCommerce is an important area of research and development extremely relevant to business, government, and academia.
